

Reflection

Throughout your project, it is important to stop and reflect. That means that you look at what you are doing, what progress you are making, and you do an evaluation or assessment. Reflection can look different for different project:

- Draw pictures of aspects of your progress
- Meet with your teammates and talk about how things are going
- Consider changes in your plan
- Look at your data (numbers) at midpoint
- Think about what you might do if one of the steps doesn't work
- Keep a journal of what you are thinking about at each step
(think of other ways to seriously evaluate your progress at every step)

Celebration

Celebration could also be seen as "publication." Let the community know about the work that you have done. Just like reflection, this could look very different from project to project.

- Put your completed project on social media
- Call the local newspaper and tell them what you have done
- Put your data on paper and post it on your refrigerator
- Talk to your family about the conclusion of the project
- Send letters or thank you notes to people who helped you (add to this list of ideas)